Universitas Sebelas Maret, Central Java, Indonesia

Abstract

The objective of this research is to investigate how the responsibility of the bureaucracy of SMP Nurul Islam Ngemplak of Boyolali regency to the external stakeholders. This research used qualitative method. The data of this research were gathered through interview, observation, documentation, and informants. The data were then analyzed by using interactive analysis technique. The results of this research are as follows: that the responsibility of the bureaucracy of SMP Nurul Islam has sufficed in the impartiality and service quality aspects as well as the compatibility of the school activities to the values and norms in the society but the responsiveness to the demand of the students still has not sufficed due to financial limitation. The responsiveness of the bureaucracy to the students' parents or their custodian has sufficed since every complaint or suggestion is taken into account thoroughly and made as the basis to establish the policies of the school.

Universitas Negeri Semarang, Central Java, Indonesia

Abstract

This study aims at organizing a family-based food empowerment; applying technology for organic vegetable farming in narrow land; and improving technical, price, and economic efficiency on production factors. The subjects of this study are housewives in Gunungpati, Semarang by employing an exploratory sequential mixed methods research design. The technology used in this activity is quite unique since the organic vegetables are cultivated using polybags considered as a pot or a place to grow vegetables. Treatments for disease control and pest vegetables harness the local herbs as an environmentally friendly medicine. The results show that organic vegetables produced by a housewives group meet the needs of food consumption, especially on vegetables. Vegetables cultivation sustainably maintains the family's food self-sufficiency and lead to semi-commercial needs of the surrounding communities. Housewives community are pleased, satisfaction and become more productive in terms of economic matters.
