Dear Editor,

We have thoroughly revised the paper from the abstract until the conclusion.

For your suggestion to compare your results with previously published works with citation Under Discussion section and to provide The novelty of the work since it is not clear and therefore needs to be given under discussion in a separate paragraph, we have carefully done them.

For the discussion, we have used many articles from many international reputable journals which discuss land disputes in various countries, we added this section to enrich the discussion:

Tat & Bagshaw (2014) in analyzing land conflicts in Cambodia states that the basis for group and individual debate and clashes is related to the conception of economic land concessions (ELCs) which have various implications for land and development. More specifically in analyzing peasants' strategies in Cambodia on land grabbing Verkoren & Ngin (2017) stated that social networks and collective action have an important meaning in the identity politics of farmers in response to land grabbing. As is the case in this study, which highlights the important function of land for individuals and families with land acquisition for public purposes which sometimes raises disputes, Akin (2017) also explains that the main obstacle to justice at this time is related to land disputes that have ties. socio-culture and economy for the lower classes with the interests of the state or corporation.

The screenshot shows a Gmail interface. At the top, there is a search bar with the text "Search all conversations" and a "Gmail" logo. Below the search bar, there is a "Compose" button and a navigation bar with icons for back, forward, and other actions. The left sidebar shows the "Mail" section with "Inbox" (405), "Starred", "Snoozed", "Sent", "Drafts", and "More". Below "Mail" are "Chat" and "Spaces" (Kerjasama). At the bottom, there is a "Meet" section.

The main content area shows an email with a redacted subject line. The body of the email contains the following text:

economy for the lower classes with the interests of the state or corporation.

In analyzing land disputes in Morocco, Bouzidi et al. (2020) focuses on power relations in land disputes in rural areas that affect public policy and farmer confidence. In the context of problem solving, Patri et al. (2020) stated the possibility of using peaceful means to deal with land disputes through Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) in rural Bangladesh. Home (2020) states that the need for shared values in resolving land disputes in sub-Saharan Africa is related to development and use rights for small groups, traditional authority and customary societies as well as development rights by the state or through concessions to developers and corporations, as well as the possibility of settlement through peaceful solutions. Several other studies also highlight legal and administrative processes as well as socio-political dimensions as solutions for peaceful land dispute resolution in various countries (Kobusingye et al., 2016; Santiago, 2017; Unruh, 2001; Rose, 1992; Childs, 2001; Yannakakis, 2008; Sakai, 2002).

For the novelty of the work is not clear and therefore needs to be given under discussion in a separate paragraph, it was done. The novelty as well as the practical implications, theoretical contribution of the study and the contribution were placed in the second paragraph of conclusion.

This part was added as your suggestion:

The novelty of this study lies in the exploration of legal concepts in land acquisition for public purposes. The novelty of the study lies fundamentally in the idea of referring to the activity of providing land by providing appropriate and fair compensation to entitled parties. Theoretically, this study demonstrates that this land acquisition is a manifestation of the nation's responsibility which aims to create public welfare through the construction of public facilities as stipulated in the constitution. Practically, in the process, land acquisition needs to involve two parties: the land owner and the party who needs the land where the landlord is the community, the nation (institution) is the party who needs the land. This study contributes to emphasizing that it is necessary to provide land for the benefit of the constitutional and beneficial for both parties through land acquisition in order to realize community welfare as mandated in the constitution.
